Outside Sampling

Marten van Heuven attended a meeting of the Study Group on US-European relations in the 1990s at the Council on Foreign Relations. The subject was David Calleo's recent article in Foreign Affairs on the burdensharing and his theme that the European allies should and could pick up some $50 billion of the defense burden currently borne by the United States. The group was skeptical about this possibility; the point was made that even as the Europeans pick up additional defense burdens, this will not necessarily lighten the pressure on the US budget.
